

Preparing to Write Your Resume

FOR THE TEACHER

Introduction

In this activity students will use the information they've acquired about resumes to begin writing their own resumes. They will:

- Inventory skills they have acquired through various activities and experiences
- Build confidence in their ability to identify and highlight their skills and qualifications
- Become aware of each section of the resume

Setting the Stage

We suggest completing What Makes a Good Resume before completing this activity. Classroom discussion can focus on what students have learned (or know) about resume writing. Remind students that their resume may be the only chance they have to impress potential employers who likely have hundreds—or even thousands—more resumes to read through for a single open position. On average, a resume gets less than a minute of consideration from employers, so it's important to make every word count. (Option: Have students reflect on the challenges of having their resume stand out from those of other applicants.)

Think about inviting hiring managers from local businesses to speak to your class about what they are looking for when they review applicants' resumes and to provide feedback on some students' resumes. If you'd like to incorporate this activity into other classes, you can modify it so that students research content and write resumes for historical figures, fictional characters, important scientists, or other individuals covered by your curriculum. Including resume writing activities in other classes ensures students get plenty of practice writing strong resumes.

Lesson Overview

- Teacher sets the stage
- Students complete pages 1-3 of the activity. Provide the Action Verbs handout (included with this lesson) to help students convey job-related tasks and achievements in a concise and persuasive way.
- After students have completed pages 1-3, review the Resume Writing Guide document (included with this lesson) as a class. This will provide an overview of each section of the resume and will assist students in preparing to write each section of their resume.

Resources

- Student can access Xello, via Chromebooks and Classlink Single Sign On
- Feel free to invite your Career Specialist in to the classroom to help support this lesson and the use of Xello

We recommend following up this lesson with the Writing Your Resume lesson.

Preparing to Write Your Resume

PART A: BRAINSTORM RESUME CONTENT

Many job searchers find it difficult to confidently take stock of their abilities and skills, especially if they don't have a lot of work experience. Think about all the activities you've participated in, including jobs, clubs, school projects, sports, and hobbies, and answer the following:

1. Describe a situation in which you had to identify and prioritize tasks in order to successfully accomplish something before a deadline.

2. Give an example of a time when you were really proud of yourself, or stood up for yourself.

3. Describe an occasion when you set a good example for members of a group, or motivated others to achieve a goal.

4. Describe how you successfully persuaded a friend, classmate, or parent to see your point of view about an issue that was important to you.

Preparing to Write Your Resume

5. Write about a time you weren't sure how to handle a problem, and what you did to figure it out.

6. Describe an important decision you had to make, and the steps you took to arrive at your decision.

7. Give an example of a time you had to gather and analyze a lot of information in order to give an informed recommendation or opinion about something.

8. Describe an instance when you didn't get along with someone you had to work with, and what you did to resolve the situation and ensure your work got done.

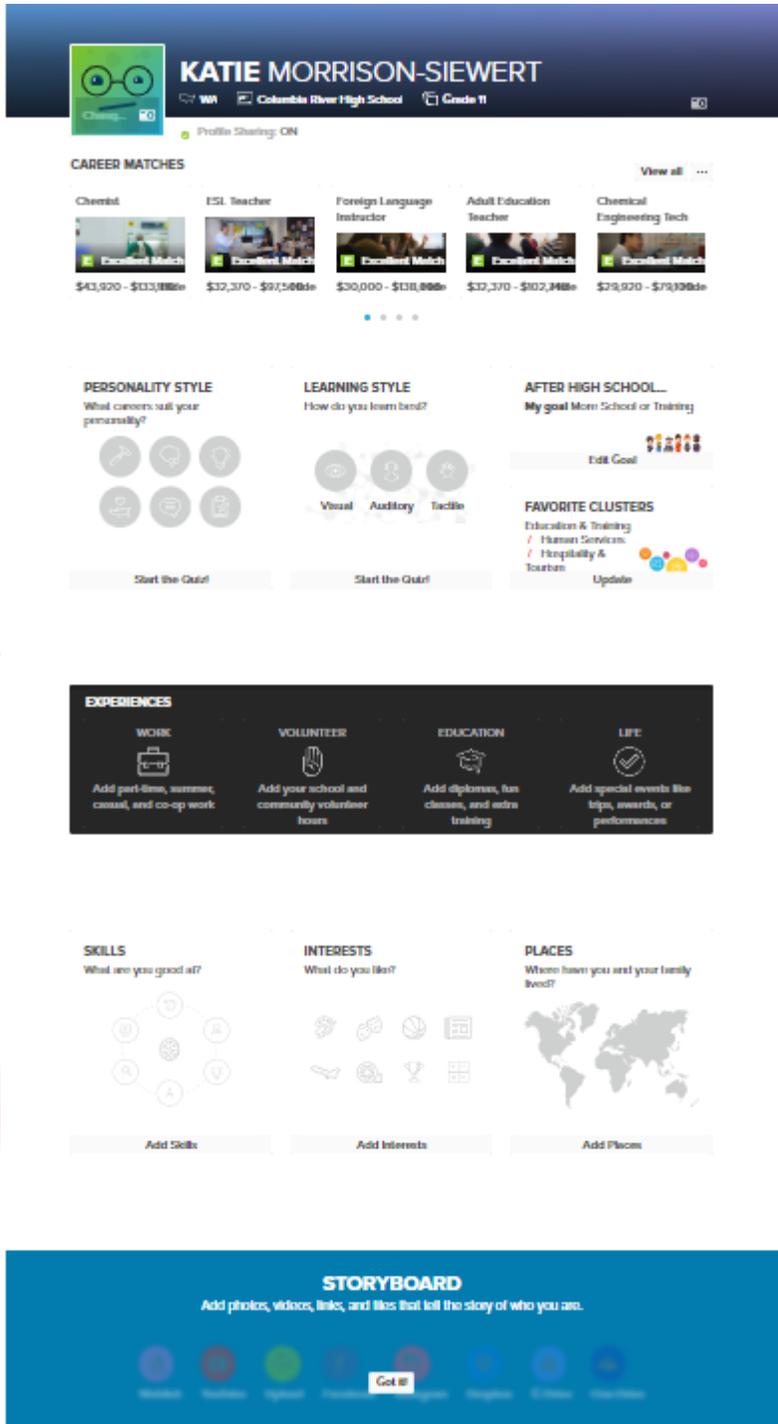

You may not have known you were doing it at the time, but through the experiences you described above, you've successfully demonstrated several skills and characteristics that many employers look for: organization, confidence, leadership, communication, problem solving, decision making, analytical thinking, and teamwork.

Preparing to Write Your Resume

In the chart below, make a list of all of your activities, experiences and accomplishments, and identify the skills you acquired or demonstrated through each experience. Use the Action Verbs handout included with this activity to assist you in conveying job-related tasks and achievements in a concise and persuasive way for your resume.

Activities / Experiences (e.g. jobs, volunteer opportunities, extracurricular activities, special training, important projects, memberships, etc.)	Skills (e.g. goal setting, creativity, critical thinking, numerical literacy, proficiency in Excel, research, adaptability, etc.)

You can also enter this information in Xello under the Experiences, Skills, Interests, and Storyboard sections.

You're ready to get started! Review the Resume Writing Guide document included in this activity to get an overview of what should be in each section of your resume.

Resume Writing Guide

Career Objectives

Customize the objective to match each position you apply for. Rather than sending out a generic resume to multiple employers, show that you care enough to state why you want this job. The statement should indicate something desirable in your skill set or what you plan to contribute to the company if you are selected for the position.

Educational History

List the diplomas, degrees, training workshops, continuing education programs, and other relevant forms and levels of education you've obtained. You can highlight relevant courses, projects, or achievements, or make any other clarifications about your educational history as required by the job posting.

Work Experience or Skills and Abilities

This section is often considered the “heart” of a resume. Give a brief outline of your career progression by presenting the relevant jobs in your work history. Make sure that starting and ending dates, job titles, and employer information are accurate, and in reverse chronological order.

Include skill/task/tools/result statements that emphasize accomplishments and achievements, rather than just duties performed on the job. Forge strong links between previous positions and the position sought, especially for your transferable skills. Make sure your statements are in past tense, not present tense, ie “developed” rather than “develop.”

Show—don't tell—by choosing action verbs and punchy adjectives over passive verbs and vague descriptors.

If you haven't had an official job, list your skills and specific abilities here and change the heading to Skills and Abilities (see section below on Skills and Abilities).

Skills & Abilities

This section provides a customized snapshot of your unique skill set, qualifications, and personal attributes. Many people, therefore, choose to place it right after the career/job objective so that employers will be more likely to read it. Highlighting valuable skills in this section can be especially helpful for those with less relevant work experience, such as someone who is searching for an entry-level position or changing careers.

Select four to six skills or abilities, and target each to the requirements of the job posting. You don't have to use full sentences, but the descriptions should be free of grammatical errors and inconsistencies. Be precise and accurate in your wording. It might help to include industry keywords, in case an automated system is sorting through applications.

Volunteer Experience

This section describes your unpaid experiences, which can be beneficial for showing that you are a well-rounded person outside of the work environment. Keep this section brief, and tailor it to match the career/job objective or job posting. Highlight relevant skills acquired through your volunteer experiences, such as leadership or organizational skills.

Awards & Certificates

List a selection of relevant academic awards, scholarships, memberships in professional associations, and/or certifications. Include the award title and date awarded as well as the granting institution or any other pertinent information.

Extracurricular Activities

List your relevant activities, including organization name and dates. Explain your role (e.g. Member or Chair), duties performed, and transferrable skills acquired.

Hobbies & Interests

Only include hobbies and interests if they are somehow related to the career/job objective (e.g. you are applying to be an outdoor tour guide and you enjoy rock climbing and snowshoeing).

Additional Information

Include this optional section only if the information you want to relay to a potential employer doesn't fit easily under any of the other headings.

References

In general, do not include your references' contact information on your resume. It is also unnecessary to have the notation "References Available Upon Request" on a resume, as this is assumed by the employer. You can prepare and print references separately.

Choose your references carefully, and obtain their permission before forwarding any of their contact information to another party. It's a good idea to give your references a copy of your resume and discuss your qualifications before they are contacted by potential employers.
